

Setting-time and place

Point of View- who is basically telling the story

1st person point of view- “I” one person gives the personal touch but the reader is limited to what that person sees, feels, thinks and hears

2nd person point of view- “You” self-help book

3rd person point of view- “He, she, they” limited or omniscient-all knowing can reveal the action and motive of any character

Simile- a stated comparison between two basically different things but they have something in common. He was a bear in the morning.
